

With great pleasure, we announce the publication of Jeanne M. Slattery's Counseling Diverse Clients: Bringing Context Into Therapy. To order your complimentary review copy, visit us online at <http://servicedirect.thomsonlearning.com>. (Please see the back of this letter for complete instructions and additional ordering options.)

This context-driven text focuses on the variable cultural issues future counselors and therapists will encounter in their line of work and provides solid methods of evaluating the client through the subject's surrounding life circumstances. The text presents concise guidelines for understanding and evaluating the role that race, ethnicity, culture, lifestyle, disability and religion play in a client's life while also avoiding the pitfalls of common stereotyped profiling and groupings. Case studies and illustrations, as well as the author's personal examples, not only make this text interesting to read, but a necessary addition to any practitioner's library of professional resources.

Consolidating key features of Slattery's text include the following:

- Detailed case studies help to develop ideas and connect them across chapters.
- The text's practical intervention strategies show students how to apply concepts covered in the text.
- Genograms, timelines, and psychosocial histories clarify the process of assessing cultural issues.
- Exercises follow most sections of the book to help the reader apply the concepts presented.

For more information on Slattery's text, we invite you to contact your local Thomson/Wadsworth representative or visit the Counseling page at <http://www.newtexts.com>. You can also join us at <http://counseling.wadsworth.com> to learn more about our complete line of texts and services.

Here's what one of your colleagues said about Counseling Diverse Clients: Bringing Context Into Therapy -

"The text is well-written and a joy to read. The author did a wonderful job of embracing various cultures in a positive, non-stereotypical fashion. The author's use of illustrations, case studies, and personal examples made the text interesting and, at times, entertaining."

Jill Jurgens, Old Dominion University
